Homeopathy

Homeopathy is a 200 year old system of natural medicine used by 500 million people around the world. It is a very gentle way to help a person return to a sense of well being, no matter how old or young.

Simply put, the Homeopath treats individual people ... they do not treat 'diseases' as such. The Homeopath looks at the whole person - mentally, emotionally and physically.

The best way to explain how homeopathy works is to say that by carefully talking with a patient the homeopath finds out exactly what particular symptoms that individual has and then carefully chooses a remedy that has been shown to have helped people with similar symptoms.

Homeopaths undergo a four-year training during which they not only learn the homoeopathic art, but they are also taught anatomy and physiology, in the same way as a GP. Many are also taught herbal and naturopathic skills.

Homeopathic remedies are highly diluted and will not interfere with any medicines prescribed by your doctor. They are very gentle and tolerated well.

Peter Smith

Peter Smith RSHom trained at the College of Homeopathy from 1981 – 1984 and has been in practice here in Cornwall ever since.

Besides being a Registered Homeopath on the Society of Homeopaths Register, Peter has also trained in various Light Touch Therapies during his early career. This enables him to help clients with back, neck and all muscular problems using painless techniques, which he can teach clients how to use.

There is no need for manipulation.

He also uses a very gentle technique called Jin Shin Jyutsu to help to rebalance people and to stimulate their bodies to heal, re-energise and to return to a state of relaxation .
